They can be automating their routine tasks or for running programs, that usually run for a few seconds and need not run every time. There are many tools out there that let you have your coding written for you, often in Delphi. However, there are still many cases where you need to perform your own coding, such as when you wish to generate a script for yourself. Scripts are simple programs, which usually run in a batch execution mode. They contain a command line and an area where they insert some code. However, such files can be written easily by any of the coding applications available. Once they are written, they can only be executed by using a batch execution, which is usually the way scripts are handled, when they are not written as stand-alone programs. Therefore, there are many problems that may occur with scripts. The main issues are: they might get lost; the editor will not show their code; and the safest approach is to completely avoid writing them, simply because, a programming-savvy person might notice their existence.
