Observations on the pattern of benzodiazepines during the abuse of multiple drugs. The pattern of benzodiazepines has been studied during the abuse of multiple drugs. Patients who abused multiple drugs received a combined detoxification treatment consisting of drug sessions (1 h) for the following drugs: oral or intramuscular dextromethorphan, orally administered thiopental and oral or intramuscular buspirone. Plasma concentrations of the benzodiazepines

were analysed by gas chromatography with nitrogen detection. The multiple-drug abusers showed a distinct pattern of benzodiazepine metabolism with a mean plasma concentration of 6.4 ng/ml for triazolam, 4.8 ng/ml for alprazolam and 2.3 ng/ml for oxazolam. This pattern was very similar to that seen in previous studies on the use of benzodiazepines on their own. Thus, the results indicate that the administration of multiple drugs can have an effect on benzodiazepine metabolism, but only to a small extent.

Q: Is it okay to use spell-check for English in PhD writing? Is it appropriate to spell-check one's own English in a PhD thesis? I haven't seen anyone use it in practice, but I'm fairly concerned that there's an exception to the general rules of spell-checking for English. A: Spell-checking is not appropriate for a PhD thesis. PhD theses are the written documentation of a research work done by a scientist at the professional level and is the culmination of years of work and investigation. They have to be as impeccable as they can be, grammatically correct, punctuated right, and all the style rules will be applied.

Not one sentence can be missed, misworded, incorrect, or something left without a comma, full stop or question mark. Even there is a single mistake, your work would not pass the committee and not be published. Of course you are going to make it right in the end by
