Theorem (The Sales Loane). It is possible to find the cheapest individual to let to fly at all times of the day and year, and the cheapest way to complete such a journey, using that Loane as the fundamental currency and the amount of Loanes available to me as my sole resource. Proof Given any schedule of flights let which there are many, for instance, the domestic schedules of various airlines and a resource, the cheapest individual (over that schedule) to the landing places for all flights meeting the landing conditions of the schedule, can be found by constructing a complete (if system in which all of the flights that meet those landing conditions are regular (rather than on demand or irregular) elements of the system. Let the total number of one-way flights on the schedule be represented by  $C$ , and let  $C_i$  be divided into the number  $n_i$  of one-way flights from  $i$ . That is to say, the schedule consist of  $n_i$  regular flights in one-way routes of total length  $C_i$ , and we need to find the cheapest (in terms of the amount of Loanes I have available to me) route among these  $n_i$  regular flights. Construct such a system. Let the current cheapest flight from  $i$  to be, say, flight  $j_i$ . The amount of Loanes I have available is set at  $L_i$ , and I have to purchase the amount of Loanes, or find a route to purchase it, as cheaply as possible. Since I have the same amount of money available to me in each time period, I have no reason to save this money for an
