Jump to the section: Introduction Enough of the gimmicks, let's get right into what this guide is about! Endgame is a term used for when you are at the highest level in a game. If, for example, you are playing WoW, then you could have been grinding pretty much non-stop on 10-man instances for years, and you would still be just barely in endgame territory. Basically it is just getting your character up to a certain level. Since Awesomenauts is a multiplayer game and not a single player game, there can be more than one character in play at the same time. Since multiplayer is the focus, you must have a place to get your characters to an endgame level, and that place is called the Arena. Here is what your rank in Cleave Arena is at the current moment in time: All you have to do is fight! *NOTE: If you are unfamiliar with multiplayer concepts, you may want to check out which has a great list of multiplayer and community FAQ's. Also, click on the tag at the bottom of this page for the gaming section and you should be able to get there. *You must have a personality of 100+ to do this role/activity A personality is used to determine whether you will be given a role/activity or not. It is calculated by your level minus your experience (what it says on your info screen next to your level). So if you are at level 2 and your experience is 1000, then you currently have a personality of -1000, meaning you should be considered to be a nobody and not give out tasks. The currency is called auto-A, or auto-R. When you are given a task, if you are above your next auto-A in rating, you will get it. If you are below that auto-A, ou will not. So it can be extremely helpful to ask for ranking over your auto-A for the page. If you hover your mouse over a task that you want to do, you will see your current auto-A rating next to it. Applications To complete some of the tasks on the forums you have to join the forum. You need
