Photoshop 2022 (version 23) (Updated 2022)

Join The Dots & Make An Invitation with Websites & Portals A few months ago, I began exploring the creative possibilities of Maps & Graphs within the context of websites & portals. I was doing this in parallel to my long running interest in the role of The Eye in image & graphic design. I began to notice some similarities between the structure of an eye, and the structure of a map or graph. All of the data collected by the eye is processed and crunched within the map/graph. Then some of that data is fed back into the map/graph for further processing. Or it might be sent into the map/graph for conversion. Or one of the other many uses of the map/graph's data. I also noticed something else. When I created a small map of the States of America, I noticed that I was continually asking myself the question, 'what is the US?'. It seemed an obvious question, but it seemed to have no definitive answer. The answer was one that I had known for a long time. The US is one big state. And I realised that one of the most powerful tools we have in using maps & graphs is the ability to zoom in & out to reveal the truth behind the image/map/graph. As we zoom in, we start to see the 'state' of the map/graph, so to speak. We start to understand more about the states, so to speak. And we're able to start to understand the information that the map/graph is trying to communicate. And that is where I started to ask myself what is the Internet and the World Wide Web. At this point, it occurred to me that you might be able to use a concept similar to the 'state of the map/graph' in order to explain to people the role of Websites & Portals. So I started to explore that further. In my understanding, you don't really need to zoom in with a 'map of the world' like I did with the States of America. The Internet & the Web is one big world map. And so, you can start to understand the role of websites & portals within it. As with any map/graph, you'll notice that the smaller the map/graph, the smaller the concept. And so, it's important that you think about what you're trying to
