In Doctor Who: Christmas Invasion, the fifth episode of Series 5, Daleks escape from the TARDIS at the end of the episode. They proceed to the railway station, get onto a train, and bring up the engine of the train via the train's own engine. During all this, the TARDIS is seemingly above ground, in the middle of The Five's carpark on a 'stage'. The Daleks need to be moved from the carpark to the train, and moving the carpark presents difficulties. The Doctor and The Five need to move the beds in the carpark from where they are to a point at the side of the stage, and it is the only thing that can hold the beds (for obvious reasons). Why do they need to move the beds from the carpark to the stage? The carpark is already low to the ground, and there is enough room to put the beds there. Why can't the beds be kept in the carpark? A: This is answered in the episode commentary for Christmas Day. Someone has a good memory. "What was the reason for the beds being put up on the side of the stage?" "They just did it that way, actually. It was very much a practical decision. They didn't want them sitting there blocking the carparks. They didn't have enough crew to move the beds down to the next level, so that's why they went for a practical solution." A: They just did it that way, actually. It was very much a practical decision. This is an answer to your original question. However, seeing as the Doctor didn't answer your question directly, maybe an explanation is needed. For
