In my global.asax i have this protected void

```
Application_Error(object sender, EventArgs e) { Exception e = Server.GetLastError(); Exception myException = Server.GetLastError(); if (e!= null && myException!= null) { HttpContext.Current.Server.Transfer("~/custom-error.aspx", false); myException.Data["message"] = myException.Message; Response.Clear(); Server.ClearError(); } else HttpContext.Current.Server.ClearError(); }

Why do the custom errors not work in my Global.asax? A: I know this is very late to the party, but it was for me. From my understanding the Application_Error method is called whenever there is a 500 error, regardless of whether or not there was an actual 500 error (let's call that logic 1.) This is a good thing. You cannot just return a generic error page from within an Application_Error method, because (at least in theory) this error-generation is meant to work when there is no error (let's call that logic 0.) If you want to generate the error page, then I believe what you need to do is
