a broader debate about the social contract between the state and its citizens, and about how to best deal with veterans coming back from the battlefields of Iraq and Afghanistan. Vietnam-era veterans have long been a source of some of the state's most loyal and well-liked voters. VFW spokesman Ron Buell said that could make it easier for the attorney general to challenge the outcome. "They're fair game, because they're veterans," Buell said. "They're not going to be afraid to speak their mind and they're going to speak their mind well." At the center of the debate is the state's military health care program, which has about 33,000 enrollees, and about half of them are Vietnam-era veterans. The attorney general's office says it plans to audit the program, and to work to ensure that it's reimbursing enrollees properly. The state says it will need to recoup $30 million in overpayments since 2005. Vietnam veterans have said they were promised they would be covered. "He's just going to use this as a way to scuttle the program," said Vietnamese veteran Rick Diaz. "It's not right, it's not fair. It's the wrong thing to do." To qualify for the VFW's military health care, vets have to prove they are serving or have served and have not been dishonorably discharged from the service. TORONTO --
