To describe the results of the PRISM Study Group in Spain, focusing on their impact on pharmacologic therapy. Analyses of three successive cohorts (1990-95, 1995-2000, and 2000-05) were carried out to evaluate the clinical and pharmacologic responses during follow-up, according to a patient's baseline data. An update of the first 6 years of the group's activities was performed for this retrospective analysis. There were 961 patients studied. The mean age was 58.8 +/- 13.1 years, and there were 49.3% males. Baseline history revealed that patients had been under treatment for at least 12 months and were receiving multiple drugs. Concomitant pharmacological treatment was carried out in 41.7% of cases. The following patients showed a better response: those with prior history of atrial fibrillation (AF) (31.4%) and cardiovascular events (39.5%), and those with longer previous experience of AF (32.3%), cardiovascular events (34.1%), and hypertension (47.7%). The incidences of pharmacologically documented AF,
