Lumion Pro 3.0 64 Bit.Q: multiple forms of a class sharing the same event function I have a User class that has a function OnOKClicked() called when a user clicks on a OK button. This class is used by 2 forms: one where a user enters their name, another where they enter a password. When the user enters their name the user name is displayed in a label and when the user enters their password the password is displayed in a label. I was thinking about how to minimize the code. I had thought of using some kind of events that I can subscribe to through the constructor of the user class, but I am not sure how to implement this. I thought of something like this: public class User { public User(string Name) { OnOKClicked += DisplayName; OnOKClicked += DisplayPassword; } private void DisplayName(object sender, EventArgs e) { Debug.Log($"User name is: {Name}"); } private void DisplayPassword(object sender, EventArgs e) { Debug.Log($"User password is: {Password}"); } [Editable(true)] [Required] [DisplayName("Name:")] public string Name { get; set; } [Editable(true)] [Required] [DisplayName("Password:")] public string Password { get; set; } [Editable(true)] [DisplayName("OK")] public event EventHandler OnOKClicked; public void 6d1f23a050
