We studied the effects of local stimulation of primary motor cortex area (M1) on motor function of hand and/or mouth in post-stroke patients. Localization of M1 area stimulated with the intracortical microstimulation (ICMS) was performed by a c.stim method, targeting M1 area contralateral to the hemisphere. We studied 3 groups: 18 patients with hemiplegia due to anterior cerebral artery infarction, 6 patients with hemineglect due to unilateral cerebellar infarction, and 10 healthy subjects. The effects were classified as: 1. movement of the wrist (52%), 2. finger movements (49%), 3. hand movement (59%), 4. masticatory movements (37%). Localization of M1 area revealed that 87% of hemiplegic patients had good responses, whereas none of the hemineglect patients had good responses. Those good responses could be obtained on those muscles which had been free in the hemiplegic patients. These findings suggest that the M1 area in hemisphere ipsilateral to the lesion plays a dominant role in the recovery of motor function.Washington, D.C.— A U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) advisory committee met this week to discuss the future of health care in America, including whether the U.S. should take an incremental or a dramatic step toward single payer. The advisory committee was convened to examine the pros and cons of a single payer system, according to FDA Commissioner Scott Gottlieb. "The primary purpose of the meeting was to collect input from panelists and the public regarding the pros and cons of single payer—the public's viewpoint," Gottlieb said, in a recent call with reporters. The panelists included hospital executives, patients, and former HHS Secretary Sylvia Burwell. The committee heard from more than 20 stakeholders and public. "The advisory committee heard from a number of stakeholders and the public, and we took in a lot of what they had to say," Gottlieb said
