FAA will use drones for commercial purposes before 2022 Apr. 27, 2014 - 12:08PM | The Federal Aviation Administration on Friday announced new rules setting the stage for small drones capable of carrying significant payloads to fly widely before being banned from urban areas by 2021. Small unmanned aircraft systems — or UAS for short — are expected to come into widespread use in the next few years and will be operated by police, air traffic controllers and farmers who will use the flying devices to inspect crops, search for missing persons and search and rescue. The FAA made the announcement at the IACP's International Homeland Security Expo 2014 in Orlando, Florida. Aviation industry experts have been predicting the new rules would be issued in the coming weeks, with federal officials indicating they would precede the end of the year. The agency said it would issue draft rules to the public in July. In August, the FAA would begin accepting public comments and the rules would be issued in September. The new rules will not apply to hobbyists, but when flying commercially, people will be required to have a certificate of authorization from the FAA and a pilot's license. They will also have to pay a $5,500 application fee as well as a $10 annual fee. People will be able to register their drones at no cost, the FAA said, but that registration will remain valid for 6d1f23a050
