This year's G20, now wrapping up in Hamburg, Germany, has been overshadowed by the body of a victim found dead a week ago near the harbor where boats from the summit meeting of world leaders sailed on Tuesday, raising the specter of a conspiracy. The victim was identified as a 21-year-old woman who was a tourist in Germany. Police in Hamburg said they were examining her death as possible cause of death due to a traffic accident. They said they were studying her Instagram account but refrained from commenting on the content. Her body has been sent to the pathologist for examination. According to local media, the victim was found dead in a wooded area near where she had traveled on the night of July 1. The body was discovered a day earlier by a jogger and was initially thought to be a woman in her 30s. Police said they initially thought the death to be an accident due to multiple injuries, but the woman's body was later found with signs of violence such as trauma, torn ligaments, marks on the arm that indicate a beating. "The sexual activity of the body has not been found. The pathologist will later disclose the results of the examination on Monday," police told the media. "The police are examining Facebook and Instagram at present," they said. While murder and an accident are two very different scenarios, it is not impossible for the two to co-exist. There have been cases of murder being committed by accident. What many are speculating, however, is that the dead woman's death was not an accident, but rather a homicide. The only thing that's missing is an explanation of why. Hamburg police said on Monday that they
