A: Yes, I'm exactly using the same method :) Goto C:\Program Files (x86)\Camfrog\ Go to camfrog.cfg Open it in a XML Editor (XML Notepad will be the easiest to use) Find the following: Q: How to debug and configure a Tomcat backend server I'm running Tomcat 6 on an Amazon EC2 instance. I can connect to the web server using the standard Tomcat test page and HTTP basic authentication works fine, so there's no issue there. However, I can't get to the back end: the service is running, but I can't get to I get a 404, and to make things more interesting, I can get to another Tomcat Web Application (Maven Web Application) running on the same EC2 instance that looks like it's on the same Apache-Tomcat-6.0.14-server service, and I can also get to that app directly by its address. How do I get to the back end of my backend server? Where should I look for errors? I'd like to be able to do some debugging there, as well, as I'm trying to build a new monitoring app that will watch the back end and write messages to a text file (HTTP requests through the HTTP Basic Authentication mechanism seem to be the trick, but I can't figure that out yet).

A: Do you have a server.xml file in your conf directory? If not, it might be the source of the problem, and if you do, then it should have one of the following startup types: 127.0.0.1 8080 3600 If you have no server.xml file, just create one.
