In 1974, when there was no National Women's Lib movement and gender equity was still a modernist ideal, Ayelen Princesita was one of a group of women revolutionaries (of 669 women featured on the wall) who, under the guidance of a revolutionary psychologist, were indoctrinated by a group of psychologists to become terrorists against the state, with the aim of overthrowing the government and installing a libertarian socialist regime. Under the aliases "La princesita," "Llena de Plata" and "Dulce Seniorita", she was trained in combat, jungle warfare, sabotage and intelligence. She carried out attacks on military targets (such as an Ordinance Plant where munition were produced) and her mercenaries were responsible for the assassination of many government officials. This chapter is from the book "The Revolution of Our Lives: Women In Chile". Ayelen Princesita: Terrorist or Revolutionary? Not by the criterion of acts but by the criterion of aims - In 1974, when there was no National Women's Lib movement and gender equity was still a modernist ideal, Ayelen Princesita was one of a group of women revolutionaries (of 669 women featured on the wall) who, under the guidance of a revolutionary psychologist, were indoctrinated by a group of psychologists to become terrorists against the state, with the aim of overthrowing the government and installing a libertarian socialist regime.
