present invention relates to an apparatus for supplying yarns, tows and the like for use in textile or other weaving, knitting and other processes. A high speed feeder or spindle is disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,689,821 dated Aug. 25, 1987. The known high speed spindle delivers a plurality of parallel yarns from a common supply bobbin. This spindle further delivers yarns to a delivery bobbin. The feeder receives the yarns from the delivery bobbin and delivers them to a yarn catcher.

Also, a drive mechanism simultaneously rotates the supply bobbin and the delivery bobbin to wind the yarns on these spindles. However, the known spindle has several disadvantages. First, it is not well suited to be coupled with a transfer mechanism. A yarn catcher is provided and the yarns can be removed from the yarn catcher and fed to the transfer mechanism. However, the supply spindle and the delivery spindle rotate at the same time and, therefore, the individual yarns are not separately controlled. This is a great disadvantage because the speed control of the transfer mechanism is very precise. Also, the direction of delivery of the yarns is always in the same direction. Second, the known spindle receives the yarns from a single supply bobbin and it does not provide a possibility for replacing the bobbins with a new one. Third, the known spindle cannot be easily decoupled from the drive mechanism.
