President Barack Obama's gutting of the arts budget in 2011 has hit hard in a number of states. In Colorado, the National Association of the Visual Arts (NAVA), which works to integrate the arts into every aspect of community life, was set to receive about $148,000 in federal funding this year. But after years of warnings that it might be targeted for elimination, the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) announced last month that it would not fund the organization

.Gulnar Kalicharan, a final year student of NMIMS, has written extensively about being a Muslim woman in the secular, English medium environment. Her piece, "Being a Muslim woman in Mumbai, India," appeared in the April issue of the Indian Journal of Gender Studies. For the past few months, she has written and recited poetry in Urdu for an Islamic congregation at her home in Bandra. "The concept of public performance for the public is what I like the most in the community, and it is very rewarding," Gulnar said. "This is how one can reach out to people. Even when I give talks in the university, many people come to me and ask for tips on how to be more Islamically devout. I want to do more such work." She narrates her story thus: "I was born and brought up in Mumbai (Bombay) India. I never knew of Islam until I was 9 years old. I was always told that my Father's religion was Hindu and my Mother's was Christian. My parents are third generation Christians. On our first marriage, we were both told that we would not be able to live together because of our different faiths. This is why we chose to stay as separate people. "However, at the end of the marriage, we began reading the Holy Quran together. I was really attracted to Islam and started listening to the sermons in the Christian church and started reading the Quran. The paths of Quranic knowledge and scriptures opened up for me. Eventually, I gave up all the myths and false beliefs and became a Muslim. I want to stay a Muslim at all cost. Therefore, I have not compromised on either the Quran or the practices." The majority of people in India are Hindus, although Islam is growing fast. India is the largest contributor of Muslims in the world and Muslim population is growing much more than any other country. In the recent Indian Census, the number of Muslims grew by 30 percent. It is not a matter of whether a person chooses his/her faith in the present but it is important to let people know that the decision to be a Muslim is not a result of compulsion and it is a personal choice. "Today, Indian Muslims are looked down upon as an alien people. Many people think that they are hypocrites for not being able to give up their traditions and cannot be reformed.
