The parasite initially resides and multiplies in the small intestine of the host where it is largely asymptomatic. However, upon reaching certain population sizes, the parasite causes a form of diarrheal disease known as giardiasis. Giardiasis is one of the most common infectious diseases in the world and has been recognized as a worldwide public health problem. Giardiasis is a disease of both animals and humans. Giardiasis in animals is most common in dogs, cats, and horses. In humans, the disease appears to be a zoonosis, spread by ingestion of water or food contaminated by infected animals. Animals may serve as reservoirs for Giardia; however, they seldom develop clinical symptoms. Infected animals shed oocysts which may contaminate food and water sources. The parasite is shed in the feces of the host. In dogs and cats, giardiasis is a self-limiting condition. Transmission to humans is zoonotic. The parasite is spread by ingestion of contaminated water or food. Giardiasis is the most commonly reported parasitic infection of humans in the United States, and it has been diagnosed in all 50 states. In addition, it is estimated that 50 million cases of giardiasis occur worldwide each year. G. lamblia is the etiologic agent of giardiasis, a widespread, often-fatal parasitic disease that afflicts humans in some Third World countries as well as North America. G. lamblia is the most common protozoan parasite associated with acute and chronic diarrhea in humans. Giardiasis is the most prevalent parasitic disease in the United States, Mexico, northern and northeastern Argentina, and the Near and Middle East, afflicting more than 750,000 people and is one of the most common causes of gastrointestinal disease throughout the world. 6d1f23a050
