A fatal case of pulmonary air embolism after aortocoronary bypass grafting is presented. Air embolism is rarely associated with aortocoronary bypass grafting; most of the cases are surgical and are likely to be iatrogenic. Air may be introduced into the circulation through bronchial anastomoses, aorto-coronary bypass grafting, and catheters, or through cardiac valves by one of various mechanisms, including shunt flow. The possible mechanism of the reported case is described, and the diagnosis and treatment of this fatal condition are discussed.
