South Korea's Kogas bought a 30.2% share of the $7.8 billion project in 2014. It will also play a major role in development of the sprawling facility due to be completed in 2020. "Japan and South Korea are neighbors and there are many concerns between the two countries. Therefore, we [Iran] will consider these issues and we will consider to sell our share of South Pars to the Japanese or South Koreans," Rouhani said in a meeting with university students. The gas project has been disrupted by US sanctions and international criticism against its vast expense and the risks of financing the project under current US-led sanctions. While India's ONGC Videsh has Iran's interest in the project, the Iranian officials said that Tehran also had interest in developing the Pars gas field. Tehran, which says it is the only country that has no gas imports from the Pars field, may seek closer ties with Asian neighbors in the face of increasing pressure from Washington. Rouhani's remarks came as his top diplomat, the foreign minister Mohammad Javad Zarif, is in talks with Japanese officials on building a special fund to cover trade costs of Tehran's oil, gas and petrochemicals. This fund will provide Japanese businesses with credit and financing, Zarif said on c6a93da74d
