The "No App is Associated with this Program" warning that appears with the NOD32 virus definitions files is legit, but not a problem, and you can turn it off if you're paranoid. It says I can't associate any programs with the virus definition file, but I'm the only person using this PC and can access the drive where the definitions file is located. Nothing is associated with the file, so there's no harm in my writing it out. You might not like it, but NOD32 can be configured to provide Windows 10 a virtual CD or DVD drive. You can use the NOD32 menu to select any program file on your PC to run instead of the virus definitions. The selection of a program to run is valid only while Windows is running, after which NOD32 will let you know it no longer has a valid definition. 5ec8ef588b
