 we surveyed the dental students enrolled in the faculty of dentistry, universiti kebangsaan malaysia (ukm) in 2013. the survey responses were analyzed and tabulated. descriptive analysis was performed to determine the frequency of opinion towards the use of hpc in dental education. this was followed by an analysis of the possible relationship between the students' opinion and the students' gender, academic background, and age. all but one of the respondents agreed that hpc was an important component of dental education. respondents' opinion as to whether the use of hpc was relevant to dental education were: none or extremely relevant, 63.6%; somewhat relevant, 30.8%; neither relevant nor irrelevant, 6.8% please note: after responses to the survey, we found a typographical error in the key independent variable - academic background. to avoid any confusion, we decided to remove that key variable from the abstract. the data is still statistically valid. it is just that the results will not be directly comparable as to statistical significance (p-value). instead, we will provide the mean and standard deviation of the key independent variable, academic background, which still have statistical significance (p-value) among the majority of the remaining variables. - simulation of pathology. - cadaver models. - wet bench technology. - support of surgical procedures. - 3d printed models. - hands on learning. - patient informed consent for invasive procedures. - patient image assessment for diagnosis and treatment planning. - patient image assessment for follow up procedures. - patient image assessment for prosthesis insertion and implant placement. - patient image assessment for dental implant and bone graft.
