Just wanted to share a little information with you guys about the new HTC TyTN. The beta version of the HTC Pocket PC comes with PDA, Pocket PC, Windows Mobile 5.0. It is chock full of some great features and pretty much the same as the Treo 750v. The only major difference is the cover which is a bit different. The TyTN has the same folding back cover as the Treo 750v in the shape of an arrow key layout. The cover is shock resistant and is adhered to the phone via a very strong Velcro. There is also a cut out for the PTT button on the side with the center revealing an indent to rest your index finger. So far I have been very pleased with the phone. The phone screen is a bit smaller than the Treo and the colors are not as rich. The keyboard on the TyTN also has a pretty rugged feel to it when compared to the Treo. I also dont think the acceleration wheel will be to my liking. This is not to say that the device is inferior to the Treo. It is very comparable and is probably a good way to get a Palm-Windows device especially if you already have a Palm Treo 750v. If you were looking for just a Palm-Windows device, youll have to give the Treo 600 or 665 a go. The HTC TyTn II is alot lighter than the Blackberry Bold 9000. I think the weight can be attributed to the smaller form factor of the device and the fact that the keyboard is now a touch screen one. It is available in black, white and red colours. The Tilt II is shipped with a detachable mini-keyboard which is comfortable to type on and is just right for one handed use. I like the form factor and it fits comfortably in my palm, I love the feel of the keyboard and the fact that it doesnt feel like a heavy handset. It is slightly heavier than the Blackberry Bold 9000, but not as heavy as the Treo 700 (which at one point was the toughest Windows Mobile phone in the market) so it isnt that big a deal. The smaller form factor is more a benefit than a negative and is probably a great point for the handset. The price of $399 isnt bad either. The bundled SIM card includes unlimited domestic calling and unlimited international calling so this could be an expensive option in some cases. The build quality is good though the back cover is thin and the keyboard, speaker and screen are very nicely made.

The back of the TyTN is pretty slick. You can use a stylus to zoom in on the display. If I am entering something, I use the primary back-screen method because its quick and easy, but for regular usage, the stylus with the dual-screen method is much faster. Overall, I like the TyTN, but it comes as no surprise that it is missing some features found in the Treo devices. It does however provide an improvement in usability and gives you the choice to use either the iPhone or another Windows Mobile phone. The phone is available at Best Buy and at the Palm Store for $249.99. If you are looking for a Windows Mobile phone, I would recommend a Palm Vx. The Treo is the best portable phone available and I highly recommend it. I just ordered one of these phones from Vodaphone. I know you are worried about if its an unlocked phone so the answer is yes it is unlocked. If you have any problems with it or have any questions to ask please feel free to email me. The Windows Mobile 6.1 ROM that I have is very stable. I have not experienced any other specific problems. I have not tired apps like the second edition of Facebook, or the other apps that I have seen reported to have issues with. The phone is incredibly fluid and responsive. I have not experienced any sluggishness. I would have to say that the phone's biggest issue is that it has the bullit touch panel. This is easily the hardest navigation surface I have used on a mobile phone. I can navigate around the OS very well in Windows Mobile 5.5, but as soon as I got to Windows Mobile 6.1 the navigation is just frustrating. Also, double tapping on the homescreen makes the screen split and double tap the screen a third time brings the app to the foreground. I know its the touch panel and it sucks, but it is more frustrating than any other problem I have experienced on the phone. 5ec8ef588b
