if you need a quick and easy way to figure out which apps your organization has in their office 365 subscription, you can use the new office app usage tool. office 365 apps are listed in tile format along with the first few lines of text for each app. since you're dealing with a large subset of the full office suite and it's not a simple product to purchase off of the microsoft store, you may want to consider the office 365 home or office 365 personal. if you don't already have an office 365 subscription, you can one of my favorite features of windows 10 is the ability to create virtual desktops. when you log in to your computer with your microsoft account, you have the option to set your username to one of nine virtual desktops by default. you can select a desktop on which you want to store all your work and the icon for the desktop will appear on your taskbar. you can then quickly switch back and forth between each desktop in your session. you can also use each desktop for different workflows; for example, my work desktop is set to have fewer distractions and a desktop that is set to have only tasks i want to work on, like drafting, is completely blank. the space on your screen you devote to one task is referred to as a workspace. office microsoft documents in word, excel, powerpoint, and onenote can be loaded into multiple workspaces, with each tab appearing in a different workspace. a rest api was introduced in outlook 2013 to add support for web services. the api is now part of the outlook web add-in (owa) api. microsoft 365 includes a special group-wide deployment profile that enables both mobile- and web-based deployment of the exchange activesync server. with these features, you can manage microsoft 365 deployments with the outlook client, the exchange admin center, and the server message block (smb) client. in this article, we demonstrate how to use the rest api to create a new user, register it to a group, and post messages to it.
