parents need to know that rat race is a slapstick comedy in the tradition of airplane!, with mile-a-minute jokes and lots of absurdity. there are toilet jokes and gross-out jokes, such as when one character vanquishes a rival by shooting him in the face with milk from a cow's udder. there is racial humor, gun humor, and tons of scenes in which fast-moving cars and buses go off the road and careen down hills.

there is drinking, gambling, and a scene in which an escort prices a list of odd sexual services. for all this, rat race is cheerfully loony and quite funny, with a brilliant cast and enough jokes that if one misses there's another to get you chuckling again. unshockable parents will enjoy watching this with older kids.

whatever changes are made to the picture, let them be mild and pretty, like these two suggestions. even in the 1960s, the classic comedy films made people good: nobody in rat race is rude to people who are different in any way. we know that the people who are not on their side are just as bad. (we also know that its harder to make money this way, since they are not in it to win it.) the film portrays some of the contestants as very good. one of the contestants, for example, has been teaching disabled children. even though he could have been in the job for the money, he stays because he wants to be with the children. the film makes him sympathetic by clearly depicting him as the gentlest and nicest of the contestants. the winner, though, is not a pleasant type at all. we know why this is the case. instead of starting out wanting to have fun and then going evil, the evil ducks start out evil, and get more and more evil as they try to out-evil each other. they have no respect for each other, they respect the only thing that matters to them, and they are mean to everybody, including animals, animals who are not part of their race, and dogs.

when they are not bad, they are depressed, except for one of them, who is always evil and never melancholy. the evil seagull is always ganging up against the others, except for the goslings.

(some of the rest of them are mean to the little goslings, too.) the evil ducks think that they are so important that they cannot do anything unless everyone else does what they say. the evil seagull is the most notorious for this, but even the evil dog has his moments. of course, the goslings are aware that they are no match for the seagulls. but their parents work together to trick the seagulls into getting off the island. but the seagulls are evil enough to not listen to reason. 5ec8ef588b
