Description of the Related Art A disk device is widely used as an external storage device for a computer. In recent years, there has been a demand for a disk device capable of recording data in a larger capacity at higher speed. For this purpose, a disk device has been developed in which a plurality of drive units are provided to allow multiple recording tracks to be formed on the disk by the respective drive units. Japanese Unexamined Patent Publication No. H07-210266 discloses a disk device in which a plurality of disk-shaped recording media each equipped with concentric tracks are arranged at a predetermined spacing. The disk device also includes a drive unit for each recording medium, and each drive unit includes a head mechanism, a head unit, and a movable unit for holding the head unit. The head mechanism includes a head for irradiating a laser beam onto a surface of the recording medium and a laser diode for driving the head. The movable unit is attached with respect to the drive unit by a flexible member. The movable unit holds the head while allowing the head to travel along the concentric track on the surface of the recording medium. In addition, in this disk device, a plurality of disk-shaped recording media are arranged at a predetermined spacing. This disk device also includes an arm mechanism with respect to each recording medium, and each arm mechanism includes a head arm for holding a head
