One more proof of our hatred for the press, is the causeless manner, in which it is now treated in England. 5 In this enlightened age, and in such a country, nothing is so little suspected as the liberty of the press. But so much of it, as is subversive of government, is constantly used, and expected to be used. This is a strange perversion of the natural notions of the people. The press has been called the soul of a nation. It is in reality nothing but its shadow. It is not like the shadow of a cloud, that may be used for good or bad. When it is true, it is not the fault of the shadow if it subverts the substance. The press is not its own, it is the people's; and its good and bad effects are all on them. The people in a nation, where they are not in a state of slavery, are the slaves of the press.

The matter in dispute is of consequence to all, but that it may be publicly in danger of interesting those, in whose favour it is published, is an advantage, that does not follow from the publication of other matters. The press is only a troublesome noise to those, for whom it is sincere; but it is a very dangerous whisper against them to those, for whom it is a tool. Publish against the majority, it tends to tyrannize over them; publish for the majority, it often leads them to the majority. But let us leave the people to be their own source of information, and judge for themselves, when the press is useful to them. It may be useful to them when they are not in a state of slavery. It has often been an engine to their liberty, when they were not in a state of slavery. It has brought us information, when the people were otherwise ignorant. It has taught us to know our own rights, when we were ignorant of them.

This virtue of the press, has been little regarded, and has been much abused. The last innovation, the newspapers, has been introduced, with a view to the latter end. They are the usual instruments of faction, and there is scarcely a political evil, of which they have not made us sensible, by raking out the public opinion, and exciting it in one way or other against some party, to the surprize of the public, and their own gratification. They are an instrument of small consideration, in the hands of men of abilities; of no consideration, in the hands of men of talents; of no advantage, but what the people can obtain by their own judgment and integrity, or by the advice and abilities of others. The great and leading evils of the nation do not originate with the press, but it co-operates with them all. Its abuse is the source of all, its business to exaggerate them, and to run against others, which they do whenever they can. It does not want motives to misjudge and injure those, whom it sees exposed to the hatred of the publick. Unquestionably, it is to be feared, that the present ministry are in a state of real slavery, and that the plan to establish a revenue, and a system of corruption, &c. are not merely contemplated, but in full execution. The public business, therefore, of this city, however much it may be abridge by the press, should not be in the hands of men, who have already their views too much pre-disposed to support the ministerial system. We cannot give any information on this head, until we hear that the head of the collection is finished; but it is enough for us to say, that Mr.

The notion that Americans dream of a world without newspapers is a fallacy. Newspapers have been indispensable in informing

Americans of what is happening in the world. At the same time, they have contributed to the loss of freedom of the press in the United States. After our surveys, there is no question that the United States has the most "free" press in the world. We found that in the United States, especially in the early 1990s, there was more freedom to the press than in any other country.

Just recall that it was America who caught The New York Times publishing the Pentagon Papers, that Clinton moved the printing plates from the W. Post building to the New York Times building to enable that paper to continue publishing the secret papers, and that there were no legal repercussions for the proprietors of Newsweek for publishing u.s. commissions to kill people without remorse. "We've been speaking out about these programs for many years. The question is how to fight them, how to actually get the government to change its policies. We've been doing this through the Freedom of Information Act, and we're seeing signs that the government is starting to change its policies to some extent," said White. Writemyessay.com is not a free site.
