A: The invalid pdf signature would be a problem. You should first try to unzip the file to see if that works and then try to do the fix. Q: Get server_name to use in case statements I have a single page wordpress blog site. Based on the query params that are being passed to the index.php page I want to know what the server the page is being rendered on is. So for example if www.domain.com/blog is the page then I want it to process the request as if www.domain.com is the domain. The logic I have right now is if (isset($_GET['domain']) && $_GET['domain'] == 'www.domain.com') { // Logic that belongs to the domain www.domain.com } else { // Logic that belongs to the domain www.domain.co } Is it possible to take the server_name (if available), add www, then concat domain in order to get www.domain.com? Thanks A: You can use htaccess and mod_rewrite to redirect www.domain.com/blog to www.domain.com/blog For example, RewriteEngine on RewriteCond %{REQUEST_URI} ^/blog [NC] RewriteRule.* [R=301,L] Redirects a request for any URL that starts with /blog to the same request with www. You don't need to do so just for one page. It will redirect all the URLs which are prefixed by /blog. Download Adobe Acrobat Pro DC 2018.013.20043 Release and its latest versionWednesday, August 27, 2009 A Real-Time Autonomous Smartphone Back in the days of PocketPilot, there were a number of companies that claimed they had a technology ready to run to replace GPS and a basic map display on a cell phone. It was interesting to see the variety of display sizes that they wanted to provide on the market. I thought I was looking at phones that were a "real-time" version of a screen map that I saw with in an airline's cockpit. And indeed they were meant to take the place of a Nav-Aid which had already been replaced by GPS. They included applications that would run over the phone's WiFi network and provide a walk-the-map display and one that would run over the phone's cellular connection. They were way too big for that. Now the whole idea is about to enter the reality market, as one technology company claims to have the right combination. The product is Ocarina, or the "Autonomy of Location Oriented CAr Devices for Navigation (ALOCCAN)." It is designed to give the information needed to the user, when on foot, as well as in a car. The service is designed to provide information about what is around a vehicle, using an application running on an iPhone. Once at the destination, the smartphone would provide map-based directions and a suitable map view. The mapping screen would have the turn-by-turn directions as well as a "replay" feature that would allow the user to replay routes and see what routes they would have taken. They claim that their system can provide a more accurate "footprint" of the route taken than traditional GPS information. The picture above shows an example of the detail shown on their software. The company will, in the future, leverage their technology to make applications available for a variety of different electronic devices. They've already started work on such applications.Citation From the August 31 edition of Fox News' Tucker Carlson Tonight TUCKER CARLSON (HOST): Well, it starts with what's called "Barbara Streisand effect" — a quote from the "Star Wars" Episode VI.
