The idea of running software as complex as Photoshop directly in the browser would have been hard to imagine just a few years ago. Digital art software requires a large amount of memory to run, and was not designed to be used in a browser. The fact that anything could be done at all in a browser was revolutionary, but there were many limitations that made the experience an imperfect one. For example, memory-intensive processes — such as the AI-powered portraits from Cloud 9 — would often take a long time to fully render and the UI would have trouble scrolling. To make the Photoshop experience more natural and modern, Adobe developed a new rendering cycle that was designed to take into account scroll events and provide users with smooth, responsive, and beautiful content even while working in the browser. The WebAssembly porting was one of the core values of the project and required of everyone involved in the project to work on. It became their goal to build the broader parts of the project in a way that used WebAssembly and build a core version of the application that could be shared. 933d7f57e6

“One of the most exciting new features in Photoshop is a breakthrough software update powered by AI,” said Shantanu Narayen, Adobe president and CEO. “Adobe feels a little like a startup company again because the innovations percolate organically from engineers who believe in the product and our mission of democratizing imagery. We are bringing together multiple new departments, including AI, Research, Design, Product Management, and Engineering, under one roof to explore the changing nature of how and where people create, and editing, imagery in their everyday lives.” Sensei AI will be available to customers in the coming months and provides a powerful new dimension of editing ideas that will help accelerate creativity and innovation in industries like healthcare and automotive design, as well as art, fashion, and architecture fields. New collaboration functions and app updates based on these innovations will be available to Photoshop users by 2018. DGX-1 and DGX-2, the world’s first GPU-based AI supercomputers, will be available to customers in 2019, jointly designed and built by NVIDIA and Adobe, with support for Photoshop Photoshop and the rest of the Adobe product line. Photoshop will be reinforced as the ultimate creative tool provider with new updates to the interface in 2017 and 2018, including via built-in AI tools. “We’re reinventing Photoshop through technology, and AI platforms represent the biggest shift in software since the big three: GPUs, CPUs and FPGAs,” said Jay Blumenkrantz, vice president of solutions for talented designers. “We are connecting AI to Photoshop to accelerate creativity, share ideas and solve the world’s toughest problems.”
