In the past it was common practice in our center for total laryngectomy to be the treatment of choice for advanced laryngeal carcinoma. As a result of the introduction of organ preservation procedures this practice has been changed. The aim of this paper is to outline the most important aspects of the pre-, intra- and postoperative treatment of patients with advanced laryngeal carcinoma.

Furthermore, we want to examine the influence of the introduction of total laryngectomy on the morbidity, mortality and treatment strategies. Between September 1990 and December 2004, 228 patients with advanced laryngeal carcinoma were treated at our institution. Of these, 69 patients had undergone total laryngectomy prior to organ preservation in another hospital (the primary group). In comparison, the remaining 159 patients had previously undergone organ preservation procedures in our clinic (the secondary group). The clinical data were analyzed retrospectively with regard to the morbidity, mortality, and the various treatment strategies. In the primary group, there was a significant difference with regard to the 5-year local relapse rate (48.2% vs. 26.2%), the 5-year survival rate (61.0% vs. 78.9%) and the 5-year larynx preservation rate (46.4% vs. 85.1%). There was no significant difference in the morbidity, mortality or the number of tracheostomies used in the two groups. Total laryngectomy is the treatment of choice for advanced laryngeal carcinoma. In the absence of organ preservation, total laryngectomy is associated with a higher local relapse rate and a lower survival rate. The morbidity and mortality are comparable to those of organ preservation techniques.[Sustained release dosage forms of nitroglycerin]. In this article, clinical problems associated with the administration of nitroglycerin sustained release preparations were studied. The following issues are discussed: 1. The choice of the way of transdermal administration of nitroglycerin is discussed. 2. The frequencies of occurrence of side effects are reviewed. 3. A comparison of the effect of two sustained release preparations of nitroglycerin is given. 4. Preliminary findings which showed the importance of
