The endothelium is a critical regulator of hemostasis and thrombosis. Insufficiently protective responses to vascular injury can lead to thrombosis, whereas excessive coagulation can lead to vessel occlusion and vascular obstruction. Evidence suggests that various conditions and chemotherapies may affect both sides of this double-edged sword, and that combination strategies may offer the best option for treatment. In the present study, the authors provide evidence that zinc is a key regulator of hemostasis. Zinc suppressed the vascular endothelium-mediated expression of various endothelial integrins, including the  $\beta$ 1-integrin. This suppression was not because of zinc 04aeff104c
