The reader has a.A nonprescription drug used to kill brain parasites that attacks the immune system as well as the nerve cells has been shown to be an effective treatment for a wide range of common conditions, including eczema and arthritis, new research indicates. The study, published today by the journal Nature Reviews Neurology, shows the antimalarial drug mefloquine (Lariam) to be significantly more effective than sulfadiazine (Vistaril) in killing some parasitic infections and that patients can safely take the drug multiple times. The drug is used to prevent and treat malaria, as well as other neurological diseases such as encephalitis, the disease caused by the mosquito-transmitted parasite, that kills over one million people a year. "This study is important because it demonstrates mefloquine's ability to kill parasites that cause human disease," said study co-author and New York University microbiology professor Fiona Jensen. “It’s the first time anyone has looked
