There are new Creative Cloud Design CC and Cloud-Based CSS expansions available in the Lightroom app as of 5.2 and 5.3 respectively. There are 40 new CSS presets, with design goals listed below: Flexibility: There are evident design goals for responsiveness and a desire to update in on-screen layout as we see it load. We see a direct result of this in adjusting position of sliders and making what we recognize as a better experience for the end user when the viewport contracts. Performance: Lowering memory consumption to be a lightweight app that moves with your device (iOS 9 and above) without needing extra RAM not only feels good, but is a direct result of this. Some design GAsset efficiency metrics are listed below: Memory Consumption: A decrease in memory consumption gives us the opportunity to make more in-design performance enhancements. For example, Text Wrap can be more granularly applied. Tighter Pinch: Stiffer interactions make for better user experience. When we used to perform an action and the user would try to navigate and our touch-area was past the bounds of what the device had, we would get into trouble. Due to this, some of our CSS cards in the UI have the potential to be tighter pinch and zoom gestures. We will be refining these over time. More Efficient: We have a lot more CSS, and even more CSS ins a sidekick app. We are drawing the line of how much we can port and where, but expect to have more of this sort of efficiency.
