While a certain amount of this functionality is now also available on the iPad, the fact that it can't simply create a layered PSD file, doesn't have many of the same capabilities as Photoshop, and does not have a dedicated Layers tab still stands. Photoshop is way too big of a program to be a tablet-only tool – you need the flexibility of layers. Videos are limited to being exported to a single format. The UI, with a few programs like Sketch and Flash, are limited. Features like the GPU Acceleration in ACR are limited and hard to find. Pixel-level undo-redo with Photoshop itself is painful, and other features like this are very limited if they appear at all.
