Adobe’s new Lens Correction lens will help you automatically correct lens-related effects that you or your software may have introduced to your images. It will be smartly applied with an easy to use interface that engages you as you edit, even if you turn off your eye-tracking feature. Eye-tracking technology is an increasingly popular feature to help you fix issues with the natural perspective of your lens. However, when you’re looking for that perfect shot, you don’t always need to think about this feature. With Lens Correction, you can blur or sharpen anything in your photos and just let it happen. You can also apply the element to video and even create an animated GIF from it.
