(1) Processing a lot of high-resolution files can bog down your machine. (2) While uploading a lot of files is a pain, showing people what's happening throughout the process is fun. Mounting and framing your picture can be a problem, especially if you are new to the process. To play it safe, I always try to get a decent assistant to follow my camera. A lot less hassle this way. Apple is perhaps the most secretive company in the world, in large part because it doesn't care how much it exposes itself, as long as it's well-protected and can embarrass or destroy an enemy quickly. Only one annual event is public about all of Apple's products, the annual Apple event held on the first day of September. But around the rest of that year, Apple holds separate studio events, along with rehearsals and last-minute details. It's almost as if Apple creates a life of its own, like a content-ragamuffin piranha that can eat only Apple topics. Apple also hosts a conference for developers once a year, called WWDC (Worldwide Developers Conference). They're also tightlipped about when and where the events are; even Apple's customers don't know the exact when something is going to happen.
